More about Bridgestone Bandag

Bandag is Bridgestone's business unit dedicated to the research, development, and manufacturing of premium retread tires. An industry best practice for large commercial fleets, retreading is the process of replacing the tread of a tire casing with a new tread rather than replacing the entire tire. The retreading process helps defer millions of tires from landfills annually by keeping them on the road instead of removing them from service after one use. Through the reduced natural resource consumption that results from the retreading process, approximately 225 million gallons of oil are saved annually given that one retread saves 15 gallons of oil and approximately 15 million tires are retreaded each year. Not only is retreading a sustainable business practice, but it can also help fleets lower tire costs to as low as 1.5 cents per mile.

The Griffin Spalding Development Authority is focused on sustainability from two perspectives...environmental and economic. We certainly want our Park and its resident companies to be able to utilize needed natural resources while at the same time preserving those same resources for future generations. The Lakes at Green Valley is the only known Eco Park in the Southeast whose focus is on sustainability of environmental resources. This is accomplished during site development and building construction through standards developed within our Sustainability Checklist...so the process is truly a collaboration of both the resident companies and the Griffin Spalding Development Authority. In addition to the environment, the Griffin Spalding Development Authority also focuses on economic resources such as workforce development and job training using entities such as Georgia QuickStart, Griffin Area College and Career Academy, Southern Crescent Technical College, our local public and private schools and others. Griffin Spalding Development Authority hopes the jobs we have today will be sustainable with the changing and improving of those jobs for future generations.
